Portfolio manager comments — Q2 2024

US small caps posted a slightly weaker performance during Q2. The downturn was driven primarily by companies within cyclical sectors due to signs of a weaker US economy. However, several companies within the technology sector continued to post strength, particularly companies with exposure to electrification and generative AI. Although there are signals that inflation in the US is beginning to fall, the US central bank wants additional clear signs before they begin a phase of cuts to the key rate. Fund returns benefited primarily from the strong performance in Tyler Technologies, Napco Securities and Clean Harbors. At the sector level, the technology sector was the strongest contributor.

Fund returns were negatively affected by a number of cyclical holdings such as SiteOne Landscape Supply, Pool Corp, WillScott Mobile Mini and Brunswick.

A number of new companies were added during the quarter and included the packaging company Aptar Group, the electricity distributor Wesco International as well as Itron, which provides technology, services and solutions for the electricity and water markets. The software company Nutanix and the fashion company Ralph Lauren were sold. The fund continues to hold high-quality companies with exposure to structurally strong themes such as re-shoring, electrification and digitalization.
